

Standing in an alcove for you to discover,
The sculptured doubles of working men,
Who have toiled above and under,
This land gave life to them.

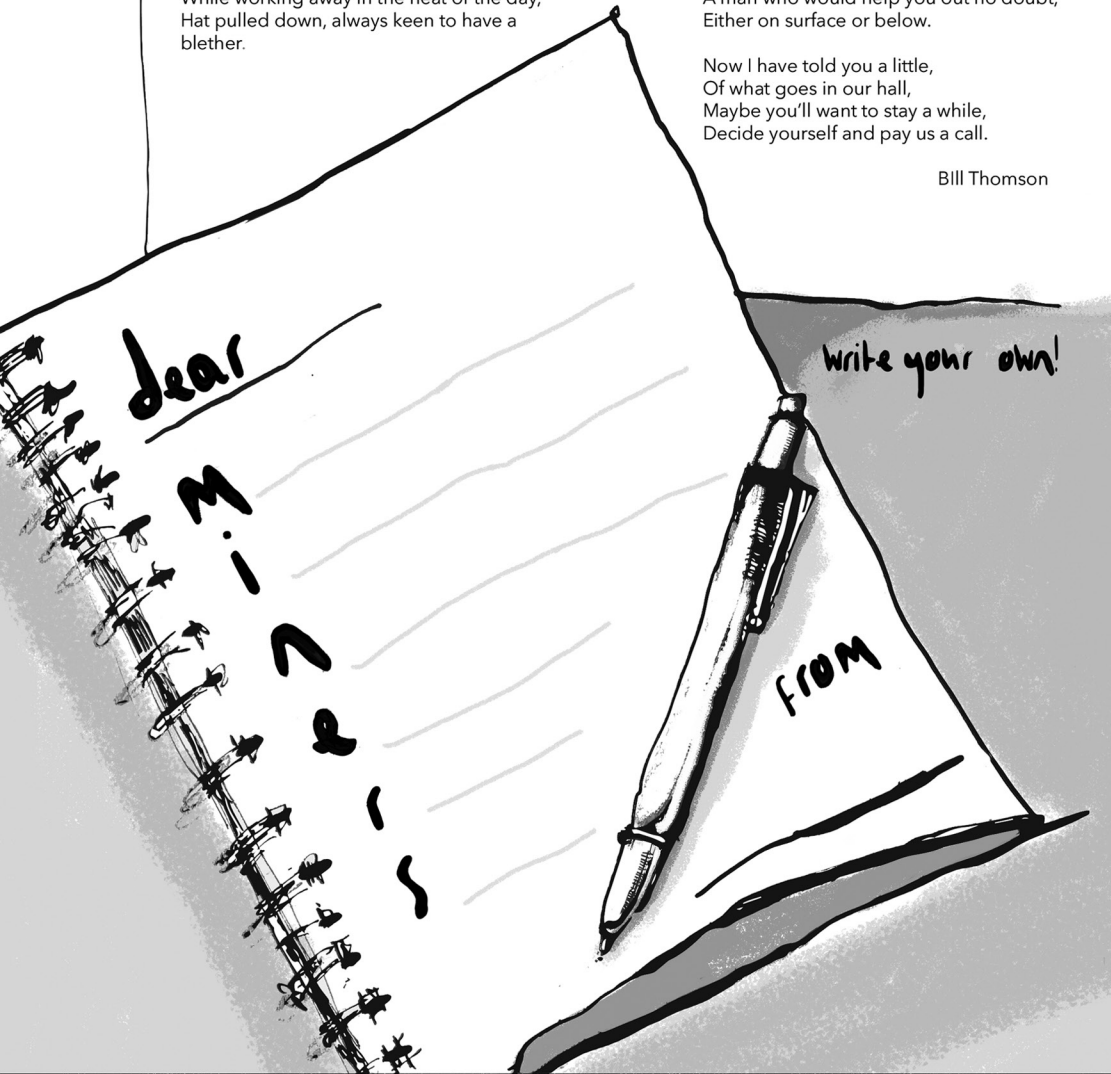

Donald McLennan a gardener as you can see,
Resting his rake taking a breather,
While working away in the heat of the day,
Hat pulled down, always keen to have a blether.

In the centre George Meldrum stands,
Proud and strong with a heart of gold,
Cared for pheasants in their runs,
A gamekeeper renowned I am told.

Resting on his shovel, lamp light out,
This miner's name I do not know,
A man who would help you out no doubt,
Either on surface or below.

Now I have told you a little,
Of what goes in our hall,
Maybe you'll want to stay a while,
Decide yourself and pay us a call.
